

The Rebel Speaks

GOVERNMENT ANTAGONIST AND HUGUENOT

"Ah," time for a story! Can you see it? High upon our perch atop the glacier... There, in the distance, like a mirage far away, floating on a heat wave in the heat of summer, when the water is smooth and calm. Another shore, far away! About three days sail. Our ship glides through the North Sea as a sleigh on ice. The stars guide us well. We have had smooth seas and clear weather and now, sheltered by a thin layer of fog, a shoreline no Northman has ever seen before.

The forests are dense and thick with pine, lush and beautiful. We must beach the ships and see to our supplies, and send out hunters. I see your hand never leaves your sword. Nervous? Think we are being watched! The hunting party just came back at a dead run. It seems there is a large group of warriors headed in our direction. The Red has called for us to leave what we have and get the ships back into the water fast... I think he is right! Something just hit my helmet. Look! A stick with a rock on the end of it! There's one stuck in your shield. Onto the ships, boys, push off hard; man the oars. I wonder what made them so mad? Fortunately, no one harmed. The dragons head on the ship suffered the most. I guess they thought it was some sort of monster and filled it full of their primitive arrows. A strange looking bunch of skraelings. Dressed in animal skins with feathers in their hair, paint like a Pict on their faces. It seems, Eisle and Trist came upon a couple of skraelings that had just made a kill. Upon seeing Eisle and Trist they fled... so, naturally, Eisle and Trist stole their dinner. It would seem meat is back on the menu. By the way, that tall one on the beach has something he is holding up on a stick, waving it at us. Is that your helmet?

Time to ride. Headed west, post by post. Someone said they thought we would soon be close to Kiowa, Comanche land. Haven't seen a feather yet!

See you on the bridge!

P.S. Columbus was lost! He was also Portuguese, not Spanish. The Portuguese are also the first to the Congo and the source of slavery in Europe and America!!!

P.S.P.S. The Norse came here escaping political and religious persecution by the church and it's allies. They followed their noses and the stars to find a place to practice their lives the way in which they were used to! You see, they came here looking for the same thing the Pilgrims came here for, "Freedom!"

They could see long distances due to an atmospheric condition call the Arctic Mirage effect. Many far away places could be seen from high places in certain times fo the year, from glaciers in Iceland and also Greenland. And that's how the first sight of the American cost looked to the first to see it, a mystical place, floating on a mirage!

the wolves will eat you."*
