

The Rebel Speaks

GOVERNMENT ANTAGONIST AND HUGUENOT

Well, someone said they liked my story about Hastings in 1066. So I guess, "well, OK," if you insist. Where do you want to go this time? Is that right? Are you sure? Well, if you're sure, I'm in!

We're stuck on a stinkin' sand bar; are you crazy? The lieutenant says to start throwing things overboard. Our sister ship is also aground. "Oh, my god," the Queen Ann's Revenge is sailing between us! Our ship shudders as a broadside rips through her side. The same for our sister ship. Men are torn limb from limb by splinters from her own hull. The pirate's cannon do their work well. Lieutenant Maynard has ordered most of us below deck until we are ordered back. There are many voices above. We hold our tongues and our silence.

There! The signal! We burst back onto the deck! Do your worst. The pirates have boarded us. Put that cutlass to work, "boy-o!" I can barely stand, the deck is soaked with blood. Look! It's himself! The man—his beard alight with fiery matches. A giant demon of a man. He confronts the Lieutenant! Maynard draws his pistol. The pirate's shot has missed; Maynard drills him dead on in the chest, but he stands still! Quick, we've got to help the lieutenant... the monster swings his sword with a powerful stroke and breaks Maynard's sword in two!

Get him! I put another pistol shot into the man as well as did you. And he still stands! On top of this satanous man now, I drive my cutlass in deep. Deeper! Deeper, my friend! Some twenty strokes and five pistol shots! He is done! His crew surrendered! The lieutenant has cut off his head and placed it upon the bowsprit so all will see, the ocean is once again safer than under the marauder Edward Teach! Otherwise known as Blackbeard the Pirate. November 22, 1718 at Ocracoke Inlet.

Blackbeard the Pirate

Edward "Blackbeard" Teach was the scourge of the Atlantic Oceans around 1717-1718. Before a battle he would dress all in black with a big black captain's hat and strap several pistols to his chest. He would put slow burning fuses in his hair and beard, giving off a constant sputtering smoke that surrounded him in a daunting fog. Most victims were so frightened that they simply surrendered rather than fight him. He took many ships without a fight and lost fewer men than many other pirates.

If today's politicians are allowed to spend our money without restraint, are we to give in without a fight?

So, you think that was funny? We could have been killed! You know, piracy is not dead, it just has a new name.. It's called Obamatics. Every time that man opens his mouth, the Jolly Roger goes up over the White House and the Senate!

Time to ride; the old Reb got a Yankee bullet through his leg today. Judging from what I've seen at the med tent, I think I'll take care of it myself and take my chances! Sent my orderly for a bottle of whiskey! Hope there is some left when he gets back.

See you on the bridge!

P.S. Inhofe is running for re-election. I can say this, he has helped my family on two separate occasions, and I am grateful for his help. He is one of the few actually standing up to Obama. I don't always agree with what he does or says, but I believe he is still the best man for the job. He is conservative and we need more conservatives in office—and fewer give-it-away liberals.

P.S.P.S. The stew gets thicker! Obama in his quest to snag Snowden, continues to antagonize and insult Putin (Russian President), while Obama and his pirates continue to raid the Ivory Coast of D.C.. I can't wait until Putin gets tired of Obama's looks of disgust and just jumps on him. Now. Wouldn't that be an example of aggressive DE taunt? What the hell does this man have on Obama that he is willing to throw the security of our country out the window for!
